1. The iron construction in the shape of a gate, identified on the grounds of the coastal artillery barracks in Redlowo, was previously said to be camouflaged by a wall of wooden boards. After a more accurate observation it was established that the camouflage was effected by covering with green tarpaulin sheets masked by netting.
2. The ground surrounding this construction is enclosed by a barbed wire fence which has been camouflaged by a hedge. This latter measure has not been successful because the barbed wire can be seen in several places.
3. To the west of the construction, dug-up earth can be seen, which has the appearance of preparations for the erection of some kind of building.
4. Alongside the camouflaged construction two wires can be seen stretched between trees. Some hummocks can be seen between the trees covered with green canvas; the earth surrounding this area has been dug up in several places and beams for building, about 6 m. long and about 20 cm. in diameter, can be seen nearby.
5. This camouflaged iron building contains artillery radar equipment and a central range finder. Both are of Soviet manufacture. Neither the radar equipment nor the range finder is at present being used.
6. Entry to the building is forbidden even to officers of the coastal artillery unit stationed in the barracks.
